In the 12th century, knights began wearing helmets that completely concealed their faces except for two narrow slits for the eyes. It made knights unrecognizable to both his friends and his enemies. Symbols on the knights shields were used to aid in recognition during a battle. By the 15ths century, shield designs became more complex. Each knight had his own heraldic designed marked on his shield, his tunic, and even on the cloth covering his horse. This design of the knights was known as a coat of arms.

For this project you will create your own Coat of Arms as well as write a 1 page paper describing your shield.

Heraldry

Heraldry began as badges of recognition. The symbols which are called charges were first painted on the shields of knights during the twelfth century. The custom spread during the Crusades and became popular in tournaments where knights, unrecognizable in full armor, gathered to fight. In time, combinations of symbols came to be known as a family's coat of arms. Coats of arms to this day are handed down from father to son.

Lions were a favorite charge in English heraldry, while fleur-de-lis were popular in France. Other popular charges were eagles, unicorns, dragons, along with a variety of birds, fish, seashells, leaves, trees, and flowers. Inanimate objects such as castles, towers, tools, keys and musical instruments were also used.

Heraldry had a practical side, also. Popular during a period of history when leaders in battle could not be identified because of their armor, the symbols on their shields made them recognizable. Coats of arms displayed on flags or banners from a nobleman's castle were used to indicate that he was in residence, and in death his coat of arms often marked his tomb. Coats of arms were also carved into rings. This symbol when pressed into soft wax was used almost as a signature for identification purposes and as a seal for documents. The French did much in organizing the science of heraldry, and the standard colors used in heraldry are known by their Old French names. The names of the seven colors, called tinctures, used in heraldry are: argent for white or silver, or for gold, azure for blue, gules for red, sable for black, vert for green, and purpure for purple. There are also two fur patterns, ermine and vair.

Cadency Decorating the Shield

Shields were handed down from fathers to sons. To show the order of births of the sons of a family, the shield was marked by a symbol such as the ones shown below. These symbols are called marks of cadency. Marks of cadency were important in order to distinguish the sons of the same family because only the oldest son inherited the original coat of arms, the castle or manor and the land which went with it. If you are a son, you may wish to make your shield more individualized by adding a mark of cadency to show your order of birth.

The file or label, mark of the oldest son

The crescent, mark of the second son

The mullet, mark of the third son

The martlet, mark of the fourth son

The annulet, mark of the fifth son

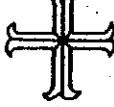

The fleur-de-lis, mark of the sixth son

The rose, mark of the seventh son

The cross moline, mark of the eighth son

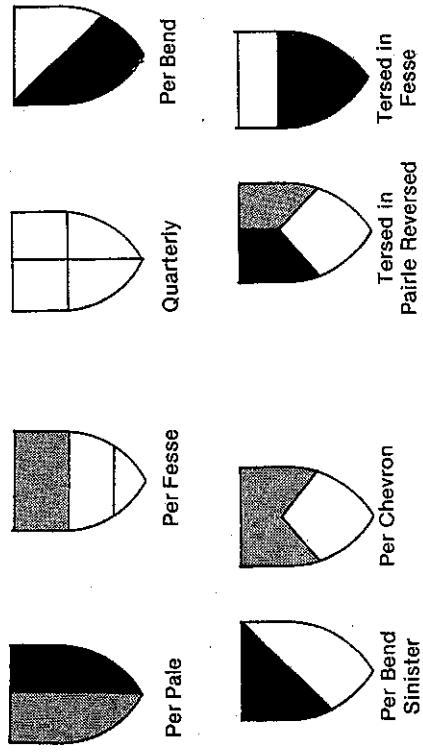

The octofoil, mark of the ninth son
